

The current progress at MBI on generation, compression and characterization of tunable energetic femtosecond pulses in the vacuum ultraviolet (<200nm) will be reviewed. Such pulses are optimal for single-photon electronic excitations in small molecules and clusters such as H₂O. First spectroscopic applications will be presented.